

Our Contributors

Dr. Grant T. Hammond (BA, Harvard University; MA, PhD, Johns Hopkins University) is professor of international relations, teaching in the Department of Strategy, Doctrine, and Airpower and the Department of Future Conflict at the Air War College (AWC), Air University, Maxwell AFB, Alabama. He was the first civilian chair of the Department of National Security Studies at AWC and the first holder of a rotating Chair of National Security Strategy. Prior to joining AWC, he held positions at Rhodes College and the Center for International Affairs at Harvard. The author of several books and a number of journal articles, Dr. Hammond is completing two books about a seminal American military strategist, Air Force colonel John Boyd.

Lt Col James M. Smith, USAF, Retired (US-AFA; MS, University of Southern California; DPA, University of Alabama), is on the faculty of the United States Air Force Academy, Colorado Springs, Colorado. He formerly served on the faculties of Air Command and Staff College, Maxwell AFB, Alabama, and the United States Military Academy, West Point, New York. A graduate of Squadron Officer School and Air Command and Staff College, Dr. Smith was recently appointed director of the USAF Institute for National Security Studies (INSS).

Col Lloyd J. Matthews (USMA; MA, Harvard University; PhD, University of Virginia) is retired from the United States Army. Overseas tours included Germany and Vietnam. In subsequent assignments, he was commander of a basic combat training battalion at Fort Ord, California; editor of Parameters, the US Army War College's quarterly journal; and associate dean of the US Military Academy, from which position he retired in 1984. The editor of five books and the author of some 60 articles, Colonel Matthews is a graduate of the Armed Forces Staff College and the Army War College.

Brig Gen John L. Barry (USAF; MPA, University of Oklahoma) is commander of the 56th Fighter Wing at Luke AFB, Arizona. At the time he wrote his article for this issue of API, he was director of plans and programs, Headquarters United States Air Forces in Europe, Ramstein Air Base, Germany. A command pilot with more than three thousand flight hours in the F-4 and F-16, he commanded an Air Force fighter squadron as well as a fighter operations group and a composite wing in a combat zone. Previous assignments include F-4 instructor pilot in Europe, test and evaluation pilot at Nellis AFB, Nevada, White House Fellow at NASA during the Challenger disaster, F-16 pilot in Korea, and military assistant to the secretary of defense during Operations Desert Shield/Storm and the dissolution of the Soviet Union. A National Security Fellow at Harvard University, General Barry is a graduate of Squadron Officer School and the Armed Forces Staff College.

Lt Col Kathleen Conley (USAF; MA, Naval War College; MS, Cornell University) is a National Defense Fellow at the John M. Olin Institute for Strategic Studies, Harvard University. Previous assignments include C-141 pilot and aircraft commander; assistant professor of management at the US Air Force Academy; operations officer for the 14th Airlift Squadron, Charleston AFB, South Carolina; and commander of the 86th Flying Training Squadron, Laughlin AFB, Texas. She is a command pilot with over thirty-two hundred hours in C-17, C-141, T-1A, and T-41 aircraft. Colonel Conley also attended Squadron Officer School and the Armed Forces Staff College.

Dr. David R. Mets (BS, USNA; MA, Columbia University; PhD, University of Denver) is a professor at the School of Advanced Airpower Studies, Maxwell AFB, Alabama, and was once the editor of Air University Review. He spent a 30-year career as a Navy sailor and as an Air Force pilot and navigator. He flew more than nine hundred C-130B sorties in Vietnam, and his last flying tour was as commander of an overseas AC-130 squadron. He had teaching tours at both the US Military Academy and the US Air Force Academy. Dr. Mets has published three books.

